

HISTORY & POLITICS DEPARTMENT

Head of Department: Mr R McDonald

Why choose the subject? You are keen, mature, aware, inquisitive, with an interest in current affairs and are ambitious to enter Law, Management (Public Relations), Journalism, the Civil Service, Industry, Nursing, the Public Services, University or Parliament! We have just the course for you.

Have you ever wondered about the answers to the following questions?

- We say we are a democracy – but is it really true?
- Are our liberties properly protected?
- Why did Labour lose the last election?
- Why have Greenpeace been a successful pressure group?
- Should people and animals have the same rights?

The answer to these and many questions will be revealed!

Who is eligible?

As Politics is a social science, it can be studied equally well by girls who are taking Arts or Science based A levels. It is certainly not necessary to have studied GCSE History in order to handle the course.

Although Politics is not studied lower down the school, it is as equally acceptable to universities and colleges as any other A level you might consider taking. Whether your motivation is academic, career-orientated or pure curiosity, the main requirement is to have an interest in the subject. You do not need a great deal of knowledge of political affairs in order to start the course but you do need to have some interest in current affairs, debates, or controversies, so candidates will be expected to acquaint themselves with quality newspapers, periodicals, journals and current affairs programmes on both T.V. and radio.

STUDENT VIEW

Politics

Ellie and I have thoroughly enjoyed Year 12 Politics and look forward to continuing our studies to A level. Since beginning the course, we have both become much more informed about current affairs and the UK's system of Government. Politics is a subject with concepts that become easier to grasp with practice. We were both new to the subject this year and this has not inhibited our progress and we never felt out of our depth.

Both teachers have supported us fully throughout the course and keep lessons fun and engaging. They have helped us develop essay writing and debating skills that are essential to being a successful Politics student.
